the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase by 1.5 billion (United Nations, 1994). The United Nations also predicts that the number of people aged 65 and over will increase by 1.2 billion in the same period (United Nations, 1994). The rapid increase in the number of people in the world is expected to have a significant impact on the environment, particularly in the area of water resources. The demand for water is expected to increase significantly, and the availability of water is expected to decrease. This is due to the fact that the number of people who are using water is increasing, and the amount of water that is available is decreasing. The impact of population growth on the environment is a major concern, and it is important to find ways to manage the environment in a sustainable way.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are illiterate has increased from 1.2 billion to 1.5 billion. The number of illiterate people in the world is expected to reach 1.7 billion by the year 2015. The number of illiterate people in the world is expected to reach 1.7 billion by the year 2015.
